PREPARING THE WAY OF THE LORD

MARK 1:1–8

1 The beginning of the good news of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.
2 As it is written in the prophet Isaiah,
   "See, I am sending my messenger ahead of you,
   who will prepare your way;
3 the voice of one crying out in the wilderness:
   'Prepare the way of the Lord,
   make his paths straight,'"
4 John the baptizer appeared in the wilderness, proclaiming a baptism of repentance for the forgiveness of sins. 5 And people from the whole Judean countryside and all the people of Jerusalem were going out to him, and were baptized by him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins. 6 Now John was clothed with camel’s hair, with a leather belt around his waist, and he ate locusts and wild honey. 7 He proclaimed, “The one who is more powerful than I is coming after me; I am not worthy to stoop down and untie the thong of his sandals. 8 I have baptized you with water; but he will baptize you with the Holy Spirit.”
The opening verse is a prologue for the gospel of Mark, serving as a lens through which the whole gospel will be viewed. It is the glad tidings about Jesus, who is the Christ (Messiah) and Son of God. The “beginning” of this good news is the prophetic preparation made by John the Baptist, followed by the baptism and testing of Jesus.

The coming of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is both a continuation and a decisive new beginning of God’s saving plan. The opening quotations from the ancient Scriptures show that his coming has been prepared by God through the history of ancient Israel. Though attributed to Isaiah, the passage comes from several places in the law and the prophets of Israel. From Exodus 23:20, “See, I am sending my messenger ahead of you”; from Malachi 3:1, “I am sending my messenger to prepare the way”; and from Isaiah 40:3, “A voice cries out: In the wilderness prepare the way of the Lord.” For Mark, Jesus’ mission involves the fulfillment of God’s plan in history. Though the Scriptural verses originally referred to Israel, they now refer to Jesus as the embodiment of ancient Israel.

John the baptizer understood his ministry in the wilderness as a desire to fulfill this passage from Isaiah. The fact that the Qumran community lived in this area of the wilderness where John ministered and that the community understood its own mission as fulfilling Isaiah 40:3 has led to a great deal of credible speculation that John had been a member of this community for a time. John is the “messenger” sent to prepare “the way” of Jesus. As the last of Israel’s prophets, he stirred up the people, challenged them to look at their lives, and prepared their hearts for Jesus Christ.

John’s “baptism of repentance” prepares the way of the Lord, offering forgiveness of sins with a converted heart (verse 5). So attractive is John’s message and baptism, that the whole countryside and all Jerusalem come to him. The place of John’s ministry, the wilderness and the Jordan River, evokes God’s saving history with Israel. In the wilderness God prepared a people for the liberated life he would provide for them, and the Jordan River was the way through which God’s people entered the promised land. John’s baptism was a way for the Jews to reaffirm their identity as God’s people—to come to the wilderness once more and to reenter the land of God’s promise through the water.

John’s clothing and diet not only associate his life with the wilderness, but they accentuate his sparse simplicity and his single-minded focus on his prophetic mission (verse 6). More specifically, his hairy garment and leather belt associate him with Elijah (2 Kings 1:8), and with the prophecy of Malachi that Elijah would return before the day of the Lord to bring a change of heart to God's people (Mal 4:5–6).

John's self-effacing proclamation specifies that the reason for his preaching and baptism is the announcement of the coming of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. He first describes Jesus as “more powerful” than himself (verse 7). Jesus would have more divine authority and would play a greater role in God's redemptive plan for the world. Second, he places himself in the role of a servant, not even worthy to untie the thong of Jesus' sandals. And finally, he contrasts his own baptism with the greater baptism Jesus will bring.

The baptism of John is part of the old covenant with Israel and prepares God's people for the coming of the kingdom of God. The baptism Jesus brings will confer the Holy Spirit, evoking the scriptural promise that God would “pour out” his Spirit (Joel 2:28 [3:1]). Mark's readers would interpret these words in light of the Christian baptism they had received. This Christian baptism, like the baptism of John, used the form of immersion in water and was associated with repentance and the forgiveness of sins. But, unlike the baptism of John, Christian baptism initiated believers into the new age of God's grace, characterized by the unique blessings of the Spirit, promised by the prophets.

Reflection and discussion

- One of the earliest designations of the Christian movement was “the Way” (Acts 9:2; 19:23). How does the beginning of Mark's gospel indicate that the ministry of Jesus would be a new Way?
• In what ways does the geography of these opening verses recall the history of God’s relationship with ancient Israel?

• I, too, need to hear the message of forgiveness, to know that I can draw near to God. What can I do to turn away from all that could separate me from the life offered by Jesus?

• How can I, like John the Baptist, draw others to Jesus and help prepare them for a deeper relationship with him?

Prayer

Jesus, help me prepare the way for you. Come into my life today, and let me know that you are the Messiah and Son of God. Guide me with your Spirit as I encounter you through my study of this holy gospel.
